Trends in Corporate Philanthropy

The world is changing. The dynamics of corporate success have shifted with more emphasis on a values-based bottom line.

Employees Drive Impact with Citizen Philanthropy – Careers are a cornerstone of modern life and yet, according to Gallup, 85% of people worldwide feel disengaged at work. We can no longer solve this issue from the top down; we have to empower employees from the bottom up. When employees are engaged, they don't just participate in change; they drive change through their purpose and generate impact for their business and the world.

Customers Choose Responsible Brands – More people are interacting with brands on a personal level, on social media and in real life. Purchasing a product or service is not just an act of commerce; it's a reflection of personal choice and values. Consumers expect brands to stand for something, and they show their approval for that stance with their loyalty and advocacy.

The Dynamics of Corporate Success Have Shifted – Profit is no longer the only bottom line companies need to pay attention to. Customers today demand that brands work to improve the world and have purpose-driven values. The companies that respond to this demand by investing in purpose and putting their values into action see returns that ripple through every part of their business.

Salesforce.org and United Way partnered to leverage the unique expertise of the leaders in workplace giving. Philanthropy Cloud gives every citizen philanthropist access to 1.4 million nonprofits as well as impact funds (collections of nonprofits dedicated to a given cause), stories, and corporate campaigns that include both giving and volunteering opportunities.
